Colleges/Universities

Most of the 143 colleges and universities in Illinois have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the University of Illinois, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. It is the center of Illinois' Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 47 colleges and universities in Indiana have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list Purdue University, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Indiana's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under "government" listings.

(A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the colleges and universities in Michigan have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list Michigan State University, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such, it is the center of Michigan's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list the University of Michigan, which also plays a major role in environmental studies, because it is affiliated with the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each includes advisory agents for public education and information.

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

(A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportat planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

(A) has responsiblity for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the colleges and universities in Ohio have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the Ohio State University which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land-grant college. As such it is the center of Ohio's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State.

We also list it as an affiliate of the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each includes advisory agents for public education and information.

WISCONSIN

EMERGENCY

IF AN IMMEDIATE HEALTH HAZARD EXISTS FROM A POLLUTION PROBLEM, ACCIDENT OR SPILL IN YOUR AREA, CALL THE STATE OF WISCONSIN'S 24-HOUR EMERGENCY NUMBER (608)266-3232 OR THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY RESPONSE CENTER, U.S. COAST GUARD AT 1-800-424-8802 (REFERS TO APPROPRIATE AGENCIES FOR OIL AND CHEMICAL SPILL CLEANUP). BOTH NUMBERS ARE ALSO LISTED ON THE INSIDE BACK COVER.

If you have a question about the environment in Wisconsin, or wish to receive printed materials about environmental matters, contact:

Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources
Bureau of Information & Education
P.O. Box 7921
Madison, WI 53707
(608)266-2621

DNR also has a network of district offices and area offices within the district which provide response to pollution problems and report to Headquarters in Madison. You may wish to contact the nearest district or area office.

Regional Planning Agencies

There are many other local and regional planning agencies in each State. We have tried to include here all agencies that currently receive EPA funding to do the planning described below. Planning agencies are also involved in land use planning, solid waste planning, farmland preservation, and other environmental matters. Look for your local planning agency in the telephone directory, under the "government" listings.

(A) has responsibility for air quality monitoring and air quality enforcement
(T) is the designated metropolitan planning organization that does transportation planning for air quality
(W) indicates responsibility for water quality planning (under Sections 106, 208, and 314 of the Clean Water Act)

Colleges/Universities

Most of the 58 colleges and universities in Wisconsin have environmental programs, in various academic departments. By getting in touch with a local college or university it should be possible to track down information that you may need.

We list the University of Wisconsin, which has a number of departments related to the environment, because it is the State's land grant college. As such it is the center of Wisconsin's Cooperative Extension Service, whose experts on a number of environmental matters including pesticides are found in every county of the State. To find the advisor nearest you, consult your telephone directory.

We also list it as an affiliate of the U.S. Department of Commerce's State Sea Grant Program. In the Great Lakes region, these programs concentrate on water safety, fisheries, toxic substances, and wetland resources. Each include advisory agents for public education and information.
